The Love of a Father

Read and answer the questions please.

Once upon a time, there lived a merchant in a far-off country. He had been so fortunate in all his business that he was enormously rich. He had, however, six sons and six daughters.

He thought that his money was not too much to let them all have everything they fancied. He did not have enough time to teach the kids how to face real life. He only gave them whatever they were asking.

His kids did not see him as a loving dad. Instead, they saw him as a money-making machine.

1. How many characters are there in this story?
2. How many daughters did he have?
3. Did his kids love him?
4. What was a thing the father did not teach them?
5. What do you think about the father's character?
6. What do you think about the kids in this story?

PARENTS AND TEENS

The clothes you wear... The food you eat... The color of your bedroom walls... Where you go and how you get there. The people you hang around with. What time you go to bed. What do these things have in common? you're asking. They're just a few examples of the many hundreds of things that your parents controlled for you when you were a child.

As a kid, you didn't have a say in everything; your parents made decisions about everything from the cereal you ate in the morning to the pajamas you wore at night. And it's a good thing, too—kids need this kind of protection on their own.

But finally, kids grow up and become teens. And part of being a teen is developing your own identity—one that is separate from your parents'. But as you change and grow into this new person who makes his own decisions, your parents have a difficult time adjusting.

In many families, it is this adjustment that can cause a lot of fighting between teens and parents. And issues like the type of friends you have or your attitudes to partying can cause bigger arguments, because your parents still always want to protect you and keep you safe, no matter how old you are.

The good news about fighting with your parents get more comfortable with the idea that their teen has a right to certain opinions. It can take several years for parents and teens to adjust to their new roles, though.

In the meantime, focus on communicating with your parents.

Sometimes this can feel impossible—like they just don't see your point of view and never will. But talking and expressing your opinions can help you gain more respect from your parents.

Keep in mind, too, that your parents were teens once and that in most cases, they can relate to what you're going through.

After reading the text, choose the best option.

In the first two paragraphs, the writer...

- A . complains that parents control kids too much.
- B . proves that kids have no right to give their opinions.
- C . describes how carefully parents look after kids
- D. explains that it is necessary for parents to control kids

A lot of fighting breaks out between teens and parents because...

- A . parents aren't used to losing control of kids
- B . teens like to have everything decided
- C . parents blame teens for not respecting them
- D . teens are eager to develop their own identity

On the writer's opinion, parents control teens in order to...

- A . prevent them from having their own ideas
- B . protect them from being hurt
- C . make them respect parents in family
- D . make sure that children have a good future

The underlined word "this" in paragraph 6 may refer to ...

- A . arguing with friends
- B . fighting with your parents
- C . communicating with parents
- D . adjusting to new roles

What might be the most suitable title for the passage...

- A . What do parents control their children for
- B . How parents take care of children
- C . How to get rid of your parents' control
- D . Why do I fight with parents so much

3. Read the text and translate orally. Write the names of traditions and describe them shortly 2-3 sentences about every tradition.

5 Fun Family Traditions From Around The World

Celebrating festivals and following traditions have been a way of living for most humans ever since they have evolved into a more civilized species. These traditions have helped us carry on the legacy of our ancestors who have laid a strong systematic foundation for their future generations, told us what it means to be human, and gave us a better understanding of the purpose of it all.

Let it be any country or culture, everyone on this planet follows these traditions in their own unique way, but one thing is common between them all, which is family. These traditions have allowed us to stay connected to our roots and following such norms has helped us get more closer to our family on a more spiritual level. Here are some fun and amazing family traditions, from across the globe, worth knowing.

Celebrate Your Child's First Day Of School Like The Germans

In Germany, when a child goes to school for the first time, the family members of that kid have a very fun way of celebrating the occasion.

This celebration is known as Einschulung. Kicking off the school for the first time is a very big deal in Germany, So, the families gift school supplies to their children and the school welcomes their new students with an assembly. Traditionally, the new students are given Schultüten (Large paper cones filled with sweets) as a token of good luck for the beginning of their school journey.

Feeding Animals On Thai Pongal

In south India, families across all southern states get out of their homes and gather around to feed animals, particularly cows and birds, in order to express their gratitude towards them and mother nature and to feel connected to the roots and the fundamentals of co-existence between different species. This tradition has been followed for ages and people participate in it every year, usually when the Hindu harvest festival of Thai Pongal is just around the corner.

All of the family members, including children and elders feed animals by placing fruits, grains, and various delicacies on banana leaves across different parts of the town and forest.

Remembering Ancestors - The Japanese Style

Japanese are famous for their festivals and traditions around the globe. But one of these family traditions really stands out from the others, for its intensely magical and spiritual nature.

Traditional Japanese architecture usually includes a small family altar or a room, known as butsudan in Japanese, as a mark of respect for the elders who have passed away. Every year families get together for one day to remember their ancestors by placing their pictures on the family altar, performing rituals, talk about them and also pass their offerings in form of food (a bowl of rice) and flowers. The complete atmosphere and vibe of this tradition are very intense and spiritual.

Traditional Family Gathering And Sea-Food Lunch On Christmas Day

Apart from all kinds of Christmas celebrations taking place in different cultures around the world, Australian families have a very unique way of celebrating the festival. Now, Christmas holidays in Australia fall during the summer season in the country. Families have a tradition to gather in the afternoon hours of Christmas day for a big and delicious feast of seafood. In Sydney, the seafood market opens for a whopping 36 hours straight before Christmas eve to serve pre-cooked seafood to the Australian people.

Storytelling, Camping, And Barbeque Dinner - A Magical Family Getaway

In Trinidad, Once in a year families visit their elders' home to go out for camping to simply sit around the bonfire for a night full of storytelling and fun. Grandparents often share traditional historical or folk stories about their culture and mythical creatures called jumbies which are often related to supernatural occurrences. After the storytelling session, everyone gathers up for a delicious barbeque dinner, plays games, and has a good time with each other which is rare for families to do otherwise as everyone is committed to their hectic routines.

4. Write about your favorite family tradition (10-12 sentences)
