The United Nations

Read the text below carefully and use what you have learnt to answer the questions below.

Peace between nations has always been of great importance, which is why the League of Nations was created in 1920. It had a lot of problems, the main one was that not enough nations wanted to join it. The league didn't have the power to stop nations attacking others. Despite its best efforts, war broke out. It was ultimately replaced soon after this.

The United Nations was officially created after World War Two, in 1945. It was created in an effort to maintain peace among the world's nations and to prevent such a devastating conflict from happening again. The United Nations do this by fostering better communication between nations and striving to ensure that none of the member countries resort to force to solve their problems.

There is also a list of rules, or charter, that every country must follow to be considered a part of the United Nations. A country that disobeys these laws could be at risk of punishment or exclusion from the United Nations.

1. What are the two main reasons the League of Nations failed?
 - a. Because it didn't work hard enough.
 - b. Because it didn't have enough member nations.
 - c. Communication methods weren't good.
 - d. It wasn't powerful enough.
2. Why was the League of Nations untimely replaced?
 - a. Because it failed to prevent a world war.
 - b. Because people didn't like the name.
 - c. Because not enough nations were a part of it.
